Minister's Foreword

Families, communities and governments all want the best possible learning environment to ensure that the students of today are equipped with the skills they need to learn, grow and shine. This is the best long-term investment that we can make in our state's future, and in the future of the next generation of Victorians.

Our Victorian Schools Plan, together with the Building the Education Revolution package, offers an unprecedented opportunity to develop 21st century educational facilities right across Victoria. With record capital funding for schools we will provide our students with access to 21st century modern buildings and a 21st century education.

Our new school building designs match the advances in education practices. These modern building designs allow for a more collaborative and flexible approach to teaching where students are more involved in what they learn, how they learn and where they learn. For students this means a stronger relationship with their teacher and a more personalised approach.

The School Design Awards were introduced to recognise and promote innovation, leadership and cutting-edge design in our schools.

The awards set a benchmark for architects and school communities as they become involved in designing and refurbishing our schools. The School Design Awards are all about recognising and celebrating great design.

Now in its fourth year, the School Design Awards are showcasing the very best in Victorian government school design.

In 2009 the awards will recognise outstanding design in the following categories: Best Primary School, Best Secondary School, Best Project over $3 million, Best Project Under $3 million and Best Project under $750,000.

This year I have also recognised three special projects awarding them a Minister's Commendation.

This booklet showcases the finalists for the 2009 awards.

We have a long standing commitment to revitalising our school's infrastructure. By working together, we can deliver extensive investment in Victoria's future, which will ensure every child is given every opportunity to shine.
